

Collections at the Wisconsin Center for Film and Theater Research relating to screenwriting

The following collections all contain materials relating to screenwriting either for film or for television. Some collections, such as the Dalton Trumbo collection, document the individual writer's process of creating a screenplay and contain several drafts of a script. Other collections, such as those belonging to directors or producers, contain the script as well as memos or letters concerning the adaptation of the script. In other instances, the collection will contain only the script.

To learn more about these collections, you can search the Wisconsin Historical Society's online catalog called ArCat: <http://arcatalog.library.wisc.edu/> Click on Basic Search and use the Author Browse option. Most of the collections have a complete finding aid online – the link Register available online will take you to an inventory for the collection.
